Program

Digital Collaboration with PDF for Design / Build Professionals

Firms of various sizes and specialties across the nation are transitioning to Building Information Modeling (BIM). Architects are generating a wealth of information about buildings and facilitating better communication throughout the design and construction process, BIM allows for faster resolution of issues and clashes. How can architects make sure that all project team members - including consultants, engineers, contractors and clients who may not yet be familiar with BIM - can contribute to the conversation? The answer for many firms is to leverage PDF, a universal file format, to supplement the distribution of BIM data to project team members. Join this presentation to learn more about how you can make BIM data accessible to everyone on a project by supplementing project information with PDF.

Speaker

Stuart Themudo, Senior Industry Specialist at Bluebeam Software, draws on more than ten years of design and construction experience to help architecture, engineering and construction firms develop digital workflows. Previously at Gensler, Stuart specialized in Aviation and Transportation design while leveraging BIM technologies for virtual design and coordination. Stuart studied architecture at The Ohio State University and holds a Master of Architecture from the University of Cincinnati. He is an Autodesk Certified Professional in Revit Architecture 2014.
